The real faults of the legislation of 1892 have been its too abject subjection to the control of political leaders and the greed of some individuals who are found in every Legislature ready for "considerations" and "arguments" well understood at Albany. But, after all, the verdict of the people will probably be that the session of 1892 has brought forth more good than evil.

"POLLY MIDDLES.

It is a relief to occasionally come across something that departs from the ordinary that removes itself from the fatal groove of fresh field. For this reason "Polty Middles, Archibald Clavering Cunter, now to be se mend itself to the public. It is odd, unusual, and agreeably unexpected. It takes a mixed party of feative pineteenth century spirits including a Drury Lane soubrette and a captain in the Coldstream Guards, from the ruins of Pompeil in 1877 to the Pompeil in the reign of Vespusian, eighteen hundred years earlier. Poliy Middles, the Drury Lane soubrette, becomes Paula, a slave girl, and the Hon. Cecil Howard, of the Coldstreams, is found as L. Cecilius Dudimius, a Roman

The change from the ruins to the old, proud city is very cleverly effected; in fact, the idea is thoroughly well carried out in every way. The dialogue is bright, and some of the situations are exceedingly ludicrous. Mr. Gunter has scarcely written anything better than " Polly Middles," and if his libretto had been fortunate enough to capture the right kind of music the "tantastic operetta" might have become the rags. As it is, however, in an effort of this kind the music is really of mara importance than the book. "Polly Middles" will not enjoy a verdant old the most utterly trivial and trashy jingle. The "compose." of this alleged music is mentioned as W. W. Lowitz. I do not know who Mr. Loastz is, but i presums that he is an entity.

There are perhaps three cheaply catchy airs in " Polly Middles." One of these has the refrain "We are going to Lunnon," and is effective enough in its way; another is a solu intrusted to Miss Pixiey. As a general tning, however, the music is beneath contempt. The leading role in this operatta was in trusted to Annie Pixley, who is a little to plump to do it justice. Miss Yolande Wallace was exceedingly effective, and so was Mir Hosa Cooke, a sort of Katisha. George C Boniface. Jr., was funny at times, whereas h was supposed to be persistently humorous William P. Gulberson and Charles J. Campbel did good work.
